

A ridiculous comedy about the Second Coming. Or not.

PLOT SUMMARY

A luxury sedan breaks down in the middle of the desert. Richard Roth, an aging mogul with one last business deal to close, squabbles with Plum, his elegant wife. Charles, their all-around manservant, fiddles with the engine. Stranded. No damn signal. No damn shade.

A man in a fancy white suit arrives. He doesn't speak. He carries a briefcase. They follow him and run into more deeply conflicted Americans who would block each other on social media. Yvette, a progressive firebrand, her partner Adam, a wilted houseplant of a man, and Steve, a blue-collar loner with trust issues.

This mysterious man they follow, Chris, doesn't speak, but he calms arguments, soothes feelings, and performs minor miracles—or not. Could be sleight of hand. Either way, everyone projects their hopes, fears, and faith onto him. Everyone, except Homeland Security and the Sheriff, who hunt him, suspecting he's a terrorist cult leader.

Ultimately, a bus of nuns gives them a ride, arriving at the Bellagio fountains for an entertaining grand finale where one question lingers: Did they follow a con artist, a magician, a Messiah, or just the best straight man in spiritual comedy history?
